MONTHLY REVIEW

The Japanese equity market swayed back and forth in December with TOPIX ending the month down by 0.4% and the Nikkei 225 down by 0.1%. In the first half of the month the Japanese yen weakened following rising expectations for a cut in US interest rates in 2024. The Bank of Japan's (BOJ) decision to maintain its monetary easing policy was well received by the market, boosting TOPIX in the latter half of the month. Value factors dominated towards the beginning of the month but growth factors overtook in the latter half of the month. Meanwhile small and mid cap stocks performed well throughout the month.
